Name participant Aung Marm Oo

Function General Secretary

Email address aungmarmoo@gmail.com

Description AASYC is an independent organization that represents students and youths from Arakan State in western Burma. It was formed on October 6, 1995, but its roots date back to the military coup in Burma in 1988. Its General Head Quarters is in Mae Sot, Thailand, and it has a branch office in Bangladesh and regional contacts Asia and Europe. As a general secretary of AASYC, my key role is to ensure the sustainability of funding that the organisation receives. Without regular and long term funding we would be unable to arrange trainings, workshops, meetings or carry out the projects in which we are involved. I also make the final decision about which members are sent on external training courses and have to consider how to accommodate new members into the organization. I am also required to write regular feedback reports to the organisations that fund our projects.

Description	AFRIM has established itself as a reliable social research, advocacy, community development, and communications institution, providing information and analyses so necessary towards forging a sound development framework for Mindanao. Without abandoning its acknowledged bias for the marginalized sectors, AFRIM likewise engages in mainstream policy debate, influencing media and policymakers in and out of government towards the promotion of the genuine development for Mindanao. It is now on its 30 years working with the civil society organizations, line agencies, and among others. I have been working with AFRIM for 5 years now and have been exposed to various community linkages and networks. At present, I am in-charge of the Natural Resource Management Program that works towards the promotion of ecological conservation, protection, rational use and sustainable management of Mindanao's remaining natural resources. The program believes that poverty alleviation is not possible if it does not involve utilization of a viable and sustainable ecological management framework.

Description

CELCOR is a non-profit public interest organization based in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea ("PNG"). CELCOR's vision is to see PNG communities living in harmony with their respective cultures and the environment in a just, secured and holistic way. Its mission is to promote customary based property rights over natural resources through law and advocacy. Backed by international donors, it provides free legal services, education and other awareness programs on natural resource management issues to rural communities and makes policy submissions on reviews affecting related public interest issues. It also has extensive networks with local and international agencies. As a Lawyer, I provide legal advice and act as an advocate in the country's higher courts for many rural communities affected in one way or another by resource development projects. I started with CELCOR as an intern in May of 2003 and am currently in charge of CELCOR's litigation team.

Email address icemthai@gmail.com

Description Since 2004 following a global research on the fast expansion of contract labour, ICEM has launched a global campaign called Contract and Agency Labour Campaign (CAL). The campaign concentrated on raising awareness and strategy exchange between union affiliates and technical support to unions active on the campaign by providing regional information exchange, coordination as well as direct training for union negotiators. I work with particularly multinational company unions in Asia to train them on social dialogue and collective bargaining. Due to the increasing use of contract labour (ixed term contracts and agency labour) by multinational companies operating in Asia, the number of regular workers has rapidly declined.

Description As Advocacy Officer for the Mangyan Mission I run campaign programs, empower leaders and IP communities to take action and effect collaborative partnerships to address critical issues affecting them, particularly their security for ancestral domain claim, and in promoting participatory and self-determined development programs for the Mangyan indigenous communities. Part of our campaign is to engage with the proponents of extractive industries, not only with the transnational mining corporations but also with government agencies aggressively promoting mining industry in ancestral lands of the indigenous peoples and even in critical ecosystems. With the aggressive promotion of mining in the Philippines, we are even more challenged to work with the indigenous communities in pursuing their right to self-determination and in ensuring that their rights are respected as provided in the Indigenous Peoples Rights Act of 1997 and to ensure compliance of corporate responsibilities of the enterprises.

member of the regional secretariat which serves as the facilitation and communication point of the network, I coordinate the task force on advocacy and capacity-building. The task force seeks to engage other stakeholders in the migration discourse, particularly lobbying at the regional and international levels, e.g., UN human rights bodies, and mobilizing migrants and advocates through training programs, consultations and the like. I also help coordinate our members' efforts in the ASEAN sub-region. I have only been with MFA since March but have seen the scope and relevance of our work impacting on migrants' lives although we do not do direct service; our members do that. But policy advocacy has its role and I believe that MFA has established collaborative relationships also with governments. Reaching out to the business sector, however, is something we can still improve on.

benchmark of PDI. Under this project, I, having the vast experience of 12 years in creating awareness on human rights among deprived communities of Sindh, interact with the National/ Multinational Oil & Gas Companies which have been exploiting the local communities since decades. I have organised awareness creating workshops, seminars and provincial level conferences against the violation of CSR. Moreover, I have written more than 50 articles on the ground realities of oil & gas areas of Sindh which have paved way for communities to raise their voice against companies' exploitation and for Government to rethink over its policies.
